A 30-year-old airline pilot has tragically died "suddenly," according to his devastated family.

Harrison Allchin, from Australia's Gold Coast, served as First Officer at QantasLink Airlines for the last six years.

According to reports, Allchin was forced to keep up to date with Covid vaccinations to keep his job with Qantas.

In August 2021, Qantas announced that Covid "vaccines" were mandated for all "Frontline employees – including cabin crew, pilots, and airport workers."

According to the airline, employees refused to work with unvaccinated co-workers.

"You might be my little bro but the mark you've left on us all is anything but little, it's immeasurable.

"This can't be real. Wake us up from this nightmare."

Qantas has offered support to Allchin's family and colleagues who would like access to counseling services.

"We are deeply saddened by the tragic loss of Harrison," QantasLink chief operating officer Nick Collie said.

“Harry was a light in many people’s lives,” campaign organizer Belle Henry said.

“With his trademark mullet and silver sunglasses, Harry was known for his love for travel, his mates, family, and his job.

“The loss of Harry was very sudden and unexpected and his family are now trying to navigate through this process while dealing with their grief.”

No cause of death has been revealed.
