By now, we all know the left's twisted environmental policies and DEI agenda are destroying the country from the inside out. But nowhere is that more evident these days than in California, where the state is literally burning to the ground thanks to both failed movements.

It's plain as day that the left's fire "management" is a colossal disaster. Los Angeles is literally ablaze and burning to the ground as we speak. But did you know there's a deep, dark secret—one that's the worst-kept secret among firefighters? They know all about it but are forbidden to speak up, fearing it'll clash with the left's plans. The truth is, many of these fires are caused by careless homeless people, and firefighters are fully aware of it. But according to local news outlets, they're not allowed to admit it on air.

FOX11's Gigi Graciette says that she's been told by firefighters how often they're not allowed to admit on camera that a fire was caused by homeless camps because it's a controversial topic the city government doesn't want discussed

Isn't it typical? The people throwing loud hissy fits over disinformation are the biggest liars on the planet—and about the planet.

The sad truth is that Dems seem to relish these horrific fires. Why, may you ask? Because they use them as an opportunity to blame climate change, stoke fear, and keep their cycle of disinformation alive and well. And the bonus is that the folks who believe climate change can start a fire aren't the type to dig deep or search for the truth. These are spoon-fed government loyalists, who will happily swallow whatever narrative they're served without asking a single question.

These fires are also a perfect fundraising opportunity for Dems. They can easily trick their gullible supporters and use death, destruction, and homes reduced to ash to fill their party's coffers.

The really scary part is that there are a slew of questions that need to be asked about “fire management” in California, and most people are living in a propaganda fog.

Mel Gibson lost everything in the latest fires—likely caused by an arsonist—and he believes what's happening in California is part of a much bigger plan.

So much loss. And it didn't have to be this way...

The mismanagement of the so-called “fire safety” program—if you can even call it a program—is downright criminal.

Ironically, the former DEI fire chief, who was just fired, is not going down alone. She's taking everybody with her.

If more people started digging into what's really happening, from homeless camps and arsonists to the dangerous overgrowth, officials might feel less inclined to blame climate change and more pressure to stop using the fire department to experiment with reckless DEI initiatives and actually save lives.

President Trump predicted all of this—including the water shortage—and even laid out a plan for Newsom to follow to prevent it. Did Gavin listen? Of course not.

Instead, Gavin ignored the common-sense approach and went full radical progressive. The result was what you'd expect: a convoluted mess they dare to call fire prevention in California.

It's all neatly laid out for you below.

Christopher Calvin:

Mismanagement and Neglect of Fire Prevention:

Forest Management: Under Newsom's administration, there's been criticism for not aggressively managing forest underbrush. Critics argue that Democratic policies have favored environmental protections over practical land management, leading to an accumulation of flammable material. This failure to clear dead wood and vegetation has directly contributed to the intensity of wildfires, with claims that controlled burns and forest thinning were neglected due to environmentalist pressures.

Water Management: Newsom's policies on water allocation, especially protecting endangered species like the Delta smelt at the expense of water storage for fire suppression, have been lambasted. Critics argue that the state's failure to build new reservoirs or adequately maintain existing ones stems from Democratic policies prioritizing environmental concerns over emergency preparedness. This has led to dry fire hydrants in critical moments, exacerbating the fires' spread.

Budget Cuts and Misallocation:

Fire Department Funding: Karen Bass's decision to cut millions from the Los Angeles Fire Department's budget has been pinpointed as a direct contributor to the disaster. The reduction in funds meant fewer resources for preventive measures, training, and emergency response, with some arguing this was done to fund other Democratic priorities like social programs or international aid, at the expense of local safety.

Misuse of Funds: There's a narrative that the general fund, which could have been used for disaster preparedness, was instead siphoned off for political campaigns or to support Democratic initiatives outside of California. This includes accusations of using public funds for electioneering, leaving less for critical infrastructure like fire prevention systems.

Ineffective Policy and Response:

Regulatory Overreach: Democratic policies, especially those under Newsom, have been criticized for creating bureaucratic hurdles that delay or prevent effective wildfire prevention strategies. For instance, environmental laws have allegedly slowed down the process of clearing firebreaks or conducting necessary burns, contributing to the severity of fires once they start.

Response to Emergencies: The absence of Mayor Bass during the initial outbreak of the fires, while on an international trip, has been highlighted as a symbol of Democratic leadership's misplaced priorities. Critics argue that such absences reflect a broader trend where political and ceremonial duties take precedence over emergency management.

Criticism of Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) Initiatives:

Impact on Emergency Services: Some argue that the Democratic focus on DEI initiatives has diluted the effectiveness of emergency services by prioritizing diversity quotas over merit-based hiring and promotions, potentially leading to less competent leadership during crises like wildfires.

Political Maneuvering Over Practical Solutions:

Political Blame Game: Rather than addressing the root causes, there's an accusation that Democratic leaders like Newsom and Bass engage in political point-scoring, blaming climate change or federal government inaction while ignoring local policy failures. This includes leveraging disasters for political gain or to push for more environmental regulations without addressing immediate land management needs.

Neglect of Infrastructure: The Democratic emphasis on green policies has, according to this argument, led to neglecting critical infrastructure upgrades or maintenance, like power lines, which are often blamed for starting fires due to poor condition or lack of maintenance.

And this entire deadly mess continues because the brain-dead left is happy to believe that some climate change boogeyman is out there starting fires. In reality, most of these fires are caused by humans—from arsonists to homeless camps and everything in between.

Trump loyalist Richard Grenell gets it. He's a California resident and is fed up with the mismanagement that's burning the state to the ground.

This is the view from my home in Manhattan Beach.

The far left policies of Democrats in California are literally burning us to the ground.

Stop voting for people who won't use common sense water management and forest policies.

I'm pissed off.

You should be, too. pic.twitter.com/GYGu0EojU6
