This is a story from the start of the new year that not many people are talking about, and it deserves to be discussed and debated in a realistic but compassionate way. A trans vet wrapped himself in the trans flag and hung himself.

Now, suicide among veterans is painfully high. This is no secret—after all, they go through immense trauma and face serious mental health struggles, which are widely acknowledged but not addressed nearly enough. But for some reason, many on the left refuse to face another harsh truth: mental illness is permeating the trans movement. The crisis runs so deep that suicide rates among trans individuals are staggering.

A 2023 study from The Journal of AMA revealed that suicide risk is a whopping eight times higher for trans people. The study also found that trans individuals are up to five times more likely to die by suicide than the rest of the population.

And no, a sex change operation doesn't magically cure anything. In fact, it can make things even worse.

Clearly, Mr. Shupe was suffering from severe mental illness. And what's truly disturbing is how the so-called "medical professionals" validated his delusions, indulged his ever-changing "gender identities," and rearranged his body parts for profit instead of giving him the real mental health care he desperately needed.

One thing most sane people can agree on is that trans men are not women, as this image clearly shows:

And if you look at this group as a whole, they're eerily reminiscent of the men from decades past—the ones who hid their cross-dressing from polite society, and for good reason.

Mr. Shupe sadly falls into that freakish category.

This guy went back and forth lost in confusion about who he was. He had no grip on reality and just needed someone who actually cared enough to help him—instead, he got a system that exploited his suffering for politics and profit.

In 2019, he called the bizarre, confusing gender movement a sham. In 2025, he died for the trans cause.

Some might say, "Make up your mind, sir!" But how could he, when his mind was so clearly lost in confusion? And it's not just James. So many other trans people are dealing with the same thing.

I Was America's First 'Nonbinary' Person. It Was All a Sham.

Just weeks after receiving a government-funded vaginoplasty, Mr. Shupe hung himself while draped in the trans flag:

To many people, this man looks utterly confused and in need of help:

In a painful bit of irony, James had just been released from psychiatric care before taking his own life. Tragically, he never got the real help he needed.

A person who died by suicide near the campuses of the Syracuse VA Medical Center and Syracuse University in upstate New York was reportedly wrapped in a Trans Pride flag.

Little is known about the person, but Syracuse.com reported on January 31 that they were a transgender patient at the center. According to the outlet, a notification from the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs said that the person had been discharged from the center's inpatient psychiatry unit on January 21.

On Monday, January 27, both a Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) spokesperson and the Syracuse University Department of Public Safety confirmed that the person's body was found that morning at a parking garage near the medical center. According to the VA's notification, the person hanged themselves by jumping from the parking garage, Syracuse.com reported.

The heartbreaking truth is that trans individuals aren't taking their own lives because they were "born in the wrong body." They are dying at alarming rates because so many of them are struggling with deep-seated mental illnesses that are being ignored, dismissed, or even encouraged under the fake claim of gender affirmation. Instead of receiving the psychological care these folks desperately need, they're being rushed into irreversible medical procedures by profit-hungry vultures and a political machine that sees them as nothing more than helpless pawns in a cultural war.

This is a massive failure of the medical community, which has totally abandoned its duty to heal in favor of politics and government funding. And the consequences are absolutely devastating. These suffering human beings aren't being saved—they're being turned into symbols, into memes, into martyrs for a cause that exists only in their confused minds and in the pockets and power plays of political and professional operatives.

This meme may come off as cruel, but what's more concerning is that it's true.

What's unfolding is a twisted and disgusting display of left-wing politics at its darkest and most sinister, and the memes are now reality.

Let's be real—a system that truly cared would treat the actual cause of their suffering—not exploit them for ideology and financial gain. But until that happens, the cycle of pain will continue, and more lives will be lost in the name of yet another left-wing lie.
